AN ADDRESS
TO THE LAYMAN;
BY A

Reader of the Kentucky Gazette.

SIR

PERUSING the Gazette of the 14th of March, I discover your address to the Printer, persuading him with the rest of the world, to believe that the practice of holding slaves is consonant to the scriptures of divine truth—you represent yourself as just alarmed, and flying to the bible, to screen you from the censures of the emancipator. And indeed one might have supposed this to be the case from the deductions you have drawn from that sacred book; for they much resemble the productions of a first thought, and the result of interested and partial investigation. Moreover your store of arguments are such, that had you taken much pains on the subject, or have been much conversant with the friends of emancipation, you certainly might have heard them sufficiently related.

Your first proposition is, "that the scriptures fully assert that the Jewish nation had a command given them by the God of Heaven himself to buy and hold bond-servants of the Heathen nations, which should be an inheritance for them and their children forever." Had you said a toleration, instead of a command, you would have come nearer the truth. For, according to your reasoning, if it was a command, every Jew, and every man now living, is not in his duty, who does not possess a slave; for you insist that the command is perpetually binding.

As the foundation of this your first proposition, you quote Noah's prophecy, respecting Canaan. If this justifies the slave holder, so would the prophecies respecting Judas and the crucifiers of our Lord, have justified them in acting as they did—to will the prophecies of Isaiah, expressly foretelling the ill treatment of Jesus, and his gospel, justify every gospel sifter from the beginning of the christian era until this day. In the next place, you quote the Mosaic code in Lev. xxv, which, as you say, commanded the Jews to buy and hold slaves. So did the Jewish law allow them to sell that which died of itself to the Heathen. Then by your own reasoning, we may export and sell to the Heathen all the creatures which die of themselves. You justify slave holding, by drawing this conclusion that "God is unchangeable, therefore it was right with him once, it remains so still." You may continue your argument, and say, if it was right with him to sell dead carcasses once, it remains to still. Was not the Jews commanded in Deut. vii—2, to smite the Heathen and utterly to destroy them, to make no covenant with them, and to shew no mercy unto them?—this with many other such passages, which I could mention, will, upon your ground, condemn us for not destroying and cutting off the savages on the North of the Ohio, as well as for shewing mercy to, and treating with them, as we have done. It will also utterly subvert the law of nations, and allow christianism to ransack, and spread devastation through all the regions of Paganism, for if it was right with God once, so to do, it therefore remains so still. Do you not know that God, by immediate delegation, sent the Jews to inflict his righteous judgments upon those Heathens for their wickedness? Therefore they were allowed to deal with them in a manner which without an express command, would have been directly contrary to the law of nature, and repugnant to the first principles of common equity and justice among mankind. Consequently, such commands were only peculiar to the Jews, and were forcible no longer than the same Heathens existed around them. You seem willing to give yourself a place in the bonds of this peculiar privilege together with the rest of the sentimental slave holders, by saying that you cannot tell of what nation or tribe you descended, whether Jew or Gentile, so you advise the tyrants not to let go a certainty for an uncertainty. Then upon your own plan, as you seem so ignorant of your pedigree, if your neighbour should seize and subject you to perpetual servitude, you could not condemn him for so doing, for he might tell you that you could not prove that he was no Jew, nor could you prove but that you were of the seed of Ham.

In the second place, you proceed to prove that Jesus Christ did not condemn slave-holders as tyrants, or inform servants that they were wrong, fully kept in bondage. Here I would ask you, did the meek and lowly Jesus ever attempt to be a rectifier of political errors? If you will follow him through all this wilderness and valley of tears, I am persuaded that you will not find one sentence in all his instructive discourses that gives the least indulgence to such an accursed practice as slave-holding is in its present existence. If he did not expressly forbid it, did he not give a number of instructions and reproofs, which were a sufficient reprehension to tyranny in the day in which he lived, and remains fully applicable in the present day? If he had only told them, that they neglected the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith, whilst they paid a Pharisaical attention to the external part thereof—if he had only told them to do unto others as they would they should do unto themselves—if he had only told them to love their neighbours as themselves, it were sufficient to condemn every slave-holder. But is his life not full of such precepts, as well as that of his apostles? And has not the apostle Paul informed you that the division wall between Jew and Gentile, Christian and Heathen, Barbarian, Scythian, bond and free, is now broken down? And did not Jesus when fulfilling the volume of Revelation to John in the life of Patmos—when denouncing his vengeance on the whole of Babylon, enumerate the slave trade with the rest of her accursed channels? How then do you find slavery tolerated by our Lord and his apostles? How many more abominable vices prevailed in the days of our Lord, which he did not expressly inveigh against? Then you may as justly plead that they were not contrary to the laws of Heaven.

The first place you have recourse to, to prove your second proposition is the viii chapter of Luke, just because our Lord brings in the master and servant as a simile to condemn the idea of merit. You may as well argue that the practices of running, wrestling and fighting, so constantly practised in the Olympic games were justifiable, because the apostles so often introduced them to illustrate the christian race by way of similitude. You next produce Luke, xvii—7, to justify slave-holding, because our Lord applauded a man's faith who possessed a servant. Can you suppose that our Lord meant to justify every part of that man's practice, because, to the shame of the Jews, he declared that a Roman possessed more faith, than he had found in Israel? Abraham's faith is twice in holy writ declared to be accounted to him for righteousness.—David is declared to be a man after God's own heart; yet the latter was a murderer, and both of them whose names, you will also find our Lord declaring to the woman taken in adultery in John viii—11, neither do I condemn thee. Then upon your ground, God is not changeable, if adultery was not condemned by him once, it is not damnable still. He applauded the man's faith, who held a servant, therefore slavery must be right. He did not condemn the adulterers, therefore adultery cannot be wrong.

You next proceed to prove that our Lord's Apostles did not tell servants they were wrongly held in servitude, nor condemn their owners as tyrants; nor enjoined obedience upon the servants. Christianity would have appeared in the world, had the apostles have raised disturbances between master and servant, king and people, stigmatized with the same infamy, which brands Mahometanism, that of being propagated by the sword—it would have lost its excellent and distinguishing characteristic of being propagated by the internal and invincible power of its author. Then it is easy to account for the silence of the apostles on the subject of slavery. And why need we look for the condemnation of slave-holding in Revelation, when natural reason's unassisted light bath, in many ages, declared it repugnant to the law of nature, which I could make appear by a number of quotations were it necessary. But I hope I have shewed you that our Lord and his apostles did condemn slavery in substance if not expressly—they taught a number of precepts which struck at the root, and it closely followed would undoubtedly terminate in the final abolition of slavery. You need not therefore think to prove slave-holding right, because the apostles charged servants to be obedient, for they also charged it upon the primitive christians, to be submissive to the most arbitrary and tyrannical government. Then by the same parity of reason you may prove that every ordinance of man is right, and that the laws to which the primitive christians were subject, were justifiable in every respect; when according to what traces history has left us of them, they were despotic and cruel. You draw your conclusion that slave-holding is not wrong because God has no where countermanded what he directed in the Mosaic constitution. Neither has he countermanded the ceremonial sacrifices and oblations, which were constantly practised in the days of our Lord. Examine then, whether you be in your duty, who neglect so many of the express and sacred commands of Heaven respecting the typical ceremonies.

You conclude your address by appealing to the experiences of christians, whether ever they were convinced of the sin of slave-holding, before they were assured of pardon for all their transgressions? you proceed to answer for them, that they never were. As positive however as you may be you are certainly mistaken with respect to some few individuals. But even if there could not be found one, who, in his first convictions, felt a desire of soul on the account of holding his fellow creatures in unjust bondage; I would ask you, whether the sinner is always convinced of all his sins at once? Or does he not discover daily more and more of his sinful heart and life, even after he lives a life of faith and dependence upon the merits of Jesus? does he not daily discover some Asian in the camp which hinders more close communication with his God. You certainly will be ready to answer in the affirmative. Then considering that the nature of man is so prone to extenuate his crimes, may we not reasonably suppose that the sin of slave-holding would almost be a mong some of the last, of his sinfulness would flare him in the face, and for which he would feel the lacerations of conscience, when self-interest and the advantage of slavery always stands ready to blind him, and hinder him from canvassing the matter by an impartial investigation? add to this, that slave holding is a matter which has long been foreign to the cogitations of the public mind, but has, for sometime met with remonstrances only from a few conscientious citizens: whose philanthropic exertions, I hope by the blessing of divine providence, joined with the present convulsions and revolutions in the world, for the sake of liberty, will not fail to bring freedom state to the conclusion of travail, in her original appearance, without having any of her heavenly features mangled by the iron hands of tyranny, her inveterate enemy. Then may not new dispensations of providence, bring new national sins to view, which has long lay concealed in the womb of self interest and avarice.

But I will not detain you any longer with remarks so repugnant to your present existing principles. I shall conclude with advising you, if my address should meet with a place in the Kentucky Gazette, to give the matter a farther investigation candidly scrutinize and examine it at the bar both of scripture and reason. If you still determine to defend the cause you have taken up, I entreat you no more to attempt on scripture ground left you should expose that sacred book to the ridicule of infidelity. On reason's ground I am convinced you can never stand. Therefore your best resource is, to plead the expediency and advantage of slavery. And on this score reason, blinded by self love, will not fail to suggest to you a numerous store of arguments from her inexhaustible treasure.

A LOVER OF LIBERTY.

TO THE INDEPENDENT ELECTORS OF FAYETTE.

FELLOW CITIZENS,

NO stronger proof is necessary of the intention of the advocates for the Bryan's Station resolutions, to prevent every amendment to the constitution which was contemplated by those who voted for calling a convention, than that of forming their ticket of men, who by their opposition to calling a convention, have given unequivocal proofs, that in their opinion no amendment whatever was necessary. But the second resolution, (to which each member of the ticket was obliged to pledge himself to conform before he could be nominated) goes farther and expressly prohibits every such amendment:—It is true the second article of the resolutions, does seem to admit an amendment respecting the senate; but if you will consider that it is to be such an one only "as the wisdom of the convention shall deem consistent with the proper design of that institution," you cannot fail to discover the intended deception; the studied ambiguity of this article certainly does honor to the ingenuity of the gentleman who penned it, and which is equalled only by his success in alarming you with regard to a certain species of property, to such a degree, as by that alarm to make you entirely regardless of your own personal rights.

That it is also the intention of the advocates for the Bryan's Station resolutions, to deprive all those of suffrage who do not either possess property to some certain amount, or a particular species of property, is evident from the declarations made by several members of the committee who were chosen to form their ticket, and as those declarations were made by a part of the committee only, it may not be considered as conclusive evidence of the fact; but when you are informed that it has been long known to be the sentiments not only of a majority of the members composing the Bryan's Station ticket, but of those also of the other counties who have adopted the Bryan's Station resolutions, and formed tickets upon their principles, you can have no doubt.

The Bryan's Station meeting were too sensible of the importance of keeping that part of their principles as much as possible out of view, and have studiously avoided every expression leading to the subject. If they had believed the expedition "liberties," (which is the only one used, that they can attempt to construe into the meaning of personal rights and privileges,) was sufficient to secure the right of suffrage on the present plan; would they not also have believed that the expression used in the 12th section of the 12th article of the present constitution viz. "Nor shall any man's property be taken, or applied to public use, without the consent of his representatives, and without just compensation being previously made," would have been equally sufficient to have secured them their slaves? they certainly would. As these charges have been frequently made and for a considerable length of time in the public papers, and not a solitary attempt by those against whom they were made, to refute them; of their truth there cannot be the shadow of doubt remaining.

CLEAN HEMP-SEED,

OF THE LAST YEAR'S GROWTH,

Lexington, April 30, 1799.

ELIZABETH-TOWN, March 26.

Capt. Hudon, arrived at New-York from the Havanna, informs that a French privateer of 12 guns, had been captured off the Havanna, by the New-York cutter, John Jay, commanded by capt. Leonard, and the Philadelphia cutter, gen. Greene, commanded by capt. Price, and carried into the Havanna.

On the 3d of February, The French schooner privateer Le Amour de la Patrie, was captured by the United States frigate, commanded by capt. Barry, a few minutes after which the filled and sunk; the crew was saved.

General Mack, notified the French generals, Chaplonet and MacDonald, to withdraw from Rome, and the Roman state; the king of Naples and general Mack entered Rome, and remained for some days in full possession of it, exercising all jurisdiction therein; but Championnet advised the directory, that he defeated the Neapolitans, the 15th December, entered Rome the 16th, and made 12,000 prisoners, (says nothing of killed and wounded,) took 99 pieces of cannon, 3000 horses and mules, and 15 standards and colours; that the king and Mack were the first who fled for Naples, which he intended to enter along with them, and it is reported he did, the 2d, of January; but that the king and royal family had got off in an English man of war, to Palermo in Sicily, but this wants confirmation.

CHAMBERSBURG, March 27.

STANDING ARMY.

Extract from governor Jackson's message to the legislature of Georgia.

The papers marked No. 14, exhibit to you a charge against an officer of the United States galley, for landing his men to take a citizen under the sedition act of the United States, as that officer is said to have declared by order of the secretary of the navy department. Although I cannot believe the secretary ever issued such an order, and forbear to comment on the propriety of the law I cannot help observing that an attempt of this nature by a military or naval officer, in a place where the law is open, and the civil magistrate bound to take cognizance of offences against the union, is not only opposed to the constitution of the United States, but tends to foment jealousies ill suited to our present situation, when unanimity is so necessary; and whilst it impels the idea of oppression, instead of that protection which I am certain the galley was intended for, operates to awaken apprehensions of an act, supposed by many not to be constitutional, and declared by a late envoy to France, high in the esteem of the United States, to be impolitic and unnecessary.

The circumstance above alluded to by governor Jackson, was in substance as follows: On the 20th of November last, capt. Randolph, of the Savannah galley, then at St. Marys, dispatched an armed force on shore, under his lieutenant, with orders to arrest and bring on board, a Mr. David Garvin, and confine him in irons; and if any resistance should be made, to fire, run him thro, or bayonet him. The citizens on shore opposed the intended arrest, disarmed the banditti, and drove them on board the galley. Captain Randolph was next day taken with a state warrant, carried before three magistrates, and his authority for the part he had acted, demanded of him—to which he replied that he had private orders from the Secretary of the Navy—and also attempted to justify himself upon a plea that Mr. Garvin "belonged to a French faction, and had damned the president for an old fool."

LONDON, January 10.

The intelligence from Germany is of a pacific complexion. The emperor so far from indicating any hostile intention against France has sent a secret agent to Paris, to confer with the directory; and such is the confidence placed by the French in the pacific disposition of the empire, that they have withdrawn the greater part of their troops from the right bank of the Rhine.

Pallawan Ogilou had obtained some further advantages over the troops of the Grand Seigneur.

The city of Dublin still continues to be a scene of political intrigue and of the most violent cabal. Meetings are every where advertised, and a new association has been formed in Dublin, called, "The Friends to the Independence of Ireland." To such an height is party spirit carried even among the yeomanry, that the captain of one of the yeomanry corps of Dublin (Sir W. Werthington, captain of the Liberty Rangers) has issued a notice "that on Monday (meaning the 21st inst.) the corps of—will parade with the king's colours, and instead of their regimental colours, a standard with this inscription, "For our king and the constitution of Ireland."—Other corps have been invited to follow the example.

January 28.

By the advice which were transmitted by Lord Nelson to Earl St. Vincent, and brought to England in the Resolution lugger, lieut. Western, the accounts of the victories of the French, which we formerly received thro' the Paris papers, are not only confirmed, but we are informed, that pursuing their success, the republican troops have compelled the king of Naples to fly from his capital, and abandon the largest and most valuable part of his dominions to the enemy.

Lord Nelson's dispatches are dated the 16th inst. We understand that the Neapolitan army, having experienced a continued succession of defeats, and that gen. Mack having despaired of being able to protect the capital, their Neapolitan Majesties, and about four hundred persons of the highest rank in the kingdom, were under the necessity of taking refuge on board the British fleet lying the bay of Naples.

The king and queen embarked on board the Vanguard, as the admiral was to proceed with them to Palermo, or Medina, in Sicily.

About 20,000 Neapolitan troops, it is said, laid down their arms to about 8000 French, who were advancing against the capital. It is understood the royal family have been able to carry with them the royal jewels, regalia, and many articles of value. There are however, in the arsenals of the kingdom, great quantities of naval and military stores, which it is thought cannot be prevented from falling into the hands of the enemy. It is possible too, that they may also obtain possession of some of the Neapolitan ships of war.

The Dublin mail of yesterday brought over the decision of the house of commons of Ireland on the question of an address of the lord lieutenant's, on which the house was left debating on Tuesday night. The paragraph objected to was that which expresses a readiness to consider the means of permanently connecting the two countries, and it gave rise to a debate which lasted till 7 o'clock the next morning, when on a division there were, for this paragraph—Ayes 107.

PARIS, Dec. 10.

The most recent news received in Europe of our Oriental army, has arrived by a Danish vessel from Rhodes, which entered Terracina (Italy) the 17th Nov. According to the accounts this vessel brings, an obstinate battle took place on the banks of the Nile, about the middle of October—Bonaparte commanded the centre, in person, with 8,500 of his best troops, his right was supported by a division of 9000 men, and his left by another of 7000; in a favorable position in his front, at a certain distance from his camp, he had formed a plan suited to the character of the enemy by the nature of the ground chosen, he contrived to make some batteries of artillery.

The advanced posts of the French had orders after the Mamelukes should charge, to give way, and form retrogressively on the flanks of this spot. The enemy deceived by seeing those troops in apparent flight, whose presence they had never before been able to withstand, pursued them with furious exultation—their whole army advanced—and when they arrived within point blank shot, two battalions which marked the artillery, having opened from the centre, several heavy and successive discharges of grape were poured in upon the assailants, by which the whole of the chosen troops which formed the enemy's van, were destroyed. The French taking advantage of this disorder, attacked them with their accustomed impetuosity, and made a most terrible havoc, so much so that 5000 Arabs delivered their arms to save their lives. The two principal chiefs of their army, one of whom is the Bahaw of Cairo, (hitherto the most inveterate enemy of the French) after several useless efforts to rally their troops, threw themselves into the French ranks and remained prisoners. The battle, in which Bonaparte gained a complete victory, took place two leagues from Cairo, on the Alexandria road. The provisions and booty which the French found in the markets attached to the enemy's camp, is sufficient to maintain the French army several months.

According to other advices from Egypt, previous to Bonaparte's leaving Cairo, he established a directory of five members, by which all the new laws were to be communicated to the several departments of Egypt, and for the better performance of the civil institutions and good government.

The accustomed feast of the birth day of Mahomed, was celebrated in that country. Bonaparte assisted there, dressed in the Oriental style, with a splendid turban and furs, and a rich jamma, or long velvet, and cummerbund or girdle. This he pleased the people, that they immediately proclaimed him their chief, by the style of Ali Bonaparte.

A French Gazette is printed at Cairo, entitled the Gazette of Egypt.

NEW-YORK, March 10.

The bill "for the Gradual abolition of slavery," was taken up in the senate of this state on Tuesday last—in committee, Mr. Hatfield in the chair—A very lengthy and animated debate ensued—in which the principal, under certain modifications, was universally conceded.—The speakers were Messrs. Jones, Addison Van Vechten, Gold, Clinton, Spencer, and Tillotson.—The committee rose without coming to a decision.—This bill has passed the assembly—it enacts that all children born of female slaves, after the 4th day of July next, shall be free—males at 28 years of age, and females at 25.

PHILADELPHIA, April 8.

On Saturday evening last, a detachment of the cavalry of this city arrived in town from the camp near Seller's on the Bethlehem road, 31 miles from Philadelphia, having in custody the noted Fries and John Eberhart, committed by judge Peters for high treason.

Fries was taken on Friday afternoon, about five miles from the camp by a detachment of cavalry dispatched for the purpose. He was holding a sale at vendue, when the troops approached; and made no attempt to escape until they appeared in sight, when he ran through some fields into a wood, and was taken after a pursuit of near two miles. Eberhart was taken at his own house, by another detachment, which left the camp about sunset the same evening, and after a very long ride, (between 40 and 50 miles) returned to camp before day break, having called at the houses of several of the insurgents, without finding them at home, they having most probably fled at the approach of the troops.

The prisoners were lodged in the jail of this city.

SACRED TO THE MUSES.

MODESTY.

THERE is, no natural fire,
A plant, that cautious flirts away,
And fluns the hand's rude touch;
Fearing the faintest furling than
That from contrition, might remain—
Sweet Modesty is such.

Contamination, thus her dread,
The blushing maiden lifts her head,
And timorous flits to-day;
Tenuous of her spotless fame,
Beneath the oppressive eye of shame,
She droops with sad dismay.

The diamond, tho' of ample worth,
When first attracted from the earth,
Can scarce attract the fight;
But when it leaves the artist's hands,
What admiration it commands,
Array'd in all its light.

As to the diamond is its glow,
Does Modesty in women there,
And stamps alike their worth:
Beauty itself must cease to be,
Without the charm of Modesty,
'Tis that which gives it birth.

Tho' drooping lies the fallen rose,
A soft mild tint it does disclose,
And delicately charms;
Thus ever-blooming Modesty,
The lot of Beauty doth supply,
And with attraction darts.

O cherish thee with greatest care,
Your greatest ornament, ye fair,
And prize it while you've breath;
By this preserved, thro' age's force,
Shall Beauty smile in every face,
And yield alone to Death.

ANECDOTE.

Doctor Johnson was one day in company with a very talkative lady, of whom he appeared to take very little notice. She, in a pique, said to him, "Why, Doctor, I believe you prefer the company of women to that of ladies?" "Madam," replied he, "I am very fond of the company of the ladies. I like their beauty,—I like their delicacy,—I like their vivacity,—and I like their silence."
